DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claims 1-23 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Gothard et al. (6600456).

Regarding Claims 1-23, Gothard et al. show in Fig. 7, for example, an RF antenna array 700 and method therefor, comprising a plurality of antenna elements 701-706 spatially distributed over an array aperture within the confines of the ground plane 710, at least some of the plurality of antenna elements each including at least one active component 711-715 and at least reactively-controlled parasitic component 701-706 plus the circuits 801a-c, 810a, 805a, etc, as specifically shown in Figures 8A-8C collocated with the active component and at least one controllably variable reactance load 801c, for example in Fig. 8C comprising a varactor connected to at least one parasitic component 701 and an array controller 140, shown in Fig. 7, and connected to at least the variable reactance loads to control a characteristic of the array. The array can be selected in sub-arrays for providing directionality of the beam pattern by varying the phases in the parasitic elements using active components. A skilled artisan would have found it obvious that the switched PIN diode, varactors and inductances and capacitances used here with the parasites 701, etc., define the reactively-controlled parasitic component as claimed. Thus, it would have been obvious to the skilled artisan that the variable reactances define the loads claimed here.

Further regarding Claim 8, the observed metric and controlled components use a feedback control system as specifically pointed out in column 13, fourth paragraph.

Response to Arguments
